Rising Need and Shrinking Resources

There are now 241,518 more New Yorkers in poverty than in 2011, bringing the total to more than 3 million.

Despite this increasing need, 59% of New York providers in the NFF State of the Sector Survey reported they were unable to meet the current need. For example, only 22% of eligible families are receiving childcare subsidies.

Even when providers are able to meet the needs of their communities, contracts, too often, do not reflect the cost of doing business: rising rents, maintenance, fair wages, etc. For instance, this year's minimum wage increase is not being reflected in increased contract rates.

Human services are on the front lines of the fight against poverty and inequality, but they are losing ground. If state funding for human services had continued to grow at its pre-2011 rate, funding for FY 2017 would have been $500M (30%) greater.

RSVP Today to Join the Conversation

How does your organization navigate this challenging environment?

What needs are most pressing in your community?

How can nonprofits lend our voices to improving the lives of New Yorkers?

Join us to discuss these questions and more.
